Mindful Self-Care Scale

We all want to be our best selves, especially when the state of being in which we exist so directly affects our loved ones. Unfortunately, with the constantly busy state in which we find ourselves, that critical aspect of our lives often falls to the end of the list.

If you would like to make sure that you, as a care person, provide the best care possible, prioritize the time to take care of yourself—physically, emotionally, and spiritually. Take a moment to consider these different points that you might employ in your self-care practices. If you are not, how can you adjust your daily routine to do so?

Physical care

*I drink at least 6-8 cups of water and eat a variety of nutritious foods.

*I exercise at least 30-60 minutes.

Supportive relationships

*I spend time with people who are good to me. (Supportive, encouraging, and believe in me)

*I feel I have someone who will listen to me if I become upset. (friend, counselor, group)

Mindful awareness

*I have a calm awareness of my thoughts and feelings, and carefully select which of these guides my actions.

Self-compassion and purpose

*I kindly acknowledge my own challenges and difficulties.

*I engage in supportive and comforting self-talk. ("My effort is valuable and meaningful")

*I remind myself that failure and challenge are part of the human experience.

*I give myself permission to feel my feelings. (for example, to allow self to cry if I need to)

*I experience meaning and/or purpose in my work and personal life. (for a cause)

Mindful relaxation

*I do many things to help me relax, including intellectual (read a book, write), interpersonal (connect with friends), creative (draw, write, play music, organize).

Supportive Structure

*I maintain a manageable schedule & balance between the demands of others and what is important to me.

*I maintain an organized, comfortable, and pleasing living and working environment to support my tasks.

Quotes on Motherhood...

God could not be everywhere and therefore he made mothers. ~Jewish proverb

All that I am or ever hope to be, I owe to my angel Mother. ~Abraham Lincoln
